

Leverage the power of positive emotions

Make an emotional connection to a topic

Use relevant and authentic activities

Utilise novel activities or engaging methods

Strengthen affective engagement through social interaction, cooperative learning and community building

Utilise story telling to engage

Provide autonomy through regulated choices

Design activities at the right level of challenge

Emotions and learning are inextricably connected

All learning is influenced by our emotions – positive and negative. If we feel happy, secure, and like we belong, we learn better, but if we are stressed, tired, hungry or feel disconnected, we won't learn as well.

Design classrooms with emotions in mind

Create a positive class environment where students feel they matter

Show authentic enthusiasm for a topic – it's contagious

Develop positive relationships and multiple, open communication channels

Let students know you are available

Co-create rules and enforce them fairly

Be aware of the effective of negative emotions

Adapt classes to students' emotional needs
